Although his me was despaired of twenty-two years ago by some of the stomach troubles, of which ne had been a sufferer for more than ten years, Dr. H. V. Reese today, at seventy-four years of age, weighs forty pounds more than he has ever weighed, is hale and hearty and possesses more vigor than most men of fifty.

It was in 1898 that Dr. Reese, then a practicing physician of Huntington, W. Va. was told there was no hope for his recovery. His condition at the time was so critical that it was impossible for him to retain either food or drink in his stomach, and when, after going as long as possible without any nourishment, he would have to wash out his stomach before he had hardly swallowed a second mouthful. In fact, Dr. Reese's

APPAREL.

Developments in the apparel trades were of minor importance. Demand for women's garments for mmediate or early delivery for the Easter trade is still apparent.

that orders for merchandise to be ielivered later than April are small. It is evident that the retailers will continue their hand-tomouth policy of purchasing, particularly on highly styled garments. House dresses, children's wear and other staple merchandise is well sold ahead for a month or more, according to manufacturers being offered for the spring season.

Cotton hosiery is less active, although high grade silk goods are in good demand, particularly for near-by delivery. Knitted spring underwear is moving well and in another week or two manufacturers will offer fall lines.

Manufacturers of work garments are bidding for business.
Some new low prices have recently been made on overalls.

The continued decline in raw cotton prices to new low levels brought about a softening in yarn and primary cotton goods prices

In the gray or unfinished goods market, the standard 64-60, 381/2 inch print cloths reached 7 cents s yard, a full half cent under the low quotations reached near the close of last year. Coarse goods in general were below, last year's low prices, but fine goods showed less disposition to make new lows.

Finished goods prices were more siderably lower to affect finished goods prices.

Ginghams, percales and bleached goods are well sold for the next month or two, but the novelty wash goods businese up to date has been hardly more than fair.
Small lot buying for immediate needs is still in vogue and this system seems to be satisfactory to the selling agents, who do not want to commit their mills to deliveries too far ahead when the price situation is still unsettled.

SILKS.

either the raw or finished silk markets. Business is proceeding in an orderly manner and present buying is on a scale that is about equal to mill production. Raw silk was inactive throughout the week, but prices showed no sagging tendency.

So far the Imperial Syndicate of Japan has managed to hold prices of raw silk to the pegged basis, nominally, although current local prices are slightly below these pegged prices. The future of the syndicate, however, is not an as-

manufacturers here, and the syn-dicate is the only thing standing in the way of lower raw silk prices, they believe. Under such conditions the users of raw silk are buying as sparingly as possible. National Silk Week throughout the country stimulated retail sales, Manufacturers report, however, according to reports reaching the market here. This is expected to exert a reaction on the wholesale market within the next few months market within the next few months through the replenishment of retailers' stocks.

Canton crepes and taffetas are still the leading silk fabrics in current distribution, although practically all lines are showing some activity. The ribbon trade is active, the demand for wide ribbons having been stimulated by the new fashion of ribbon sashes.

A leading ribbon manufacturer, who introduced such sashes for samples, has gone into the sash business on an extensive scale as a result of the good sales made on samples.

In the men's garment trade wholesale business is not particularly brisk. Manufacturers are turning their thoughts to plans for the fall season, which will be inaugurated within the next two fault to find with the new prices and apparently are placing substantial orders. The company's overcoating business for next fall has been booked up in good order, it is said, and other selling agents who have offered overcoatings report good response.

Little change was shown by

The women's wear fabric trade, however, appears to have made even better progress. Prices are hardening and several lines of distinctive fabrics have been well sold.

Raw wool has not reflected the full effect of the improvement in full effect of the improvement in the goods trade, but dealers are confidently looking forward to a greater volume of business. Government auction sales will be resumed in the near future. The large raw wool supply, however, precludes any marked higher prices. Statistics issued by the Government last week showed more woolen and worsted machinery in operation on February 1 than on January 1 and a consequent increase in the number of machine hours worked a week.

FURS.

The incipient boom in raw furs was squelched at the auction sale conducted by the International Fur Exchange in St. Louis last week. Staple furs showed declines of approximately 50 per cent from those obtained at the company's spring sale in May.

On fancy furs the declines were less and some advances over the prices paid at the winter sales in New York in January were made. New York in January were made. The bidding toward the close of the sale showed signs of lagging, and it was apparent that the trade feit some of the prices were too high for general consumption.

There was a lot of "bidding-in" by the auction company to protect holdings, where prices bid by buyers were not considered high enough.

The movement of summer furs is gaining ground locally. Early retail sales indicate a demand for gray furs, particularly squirrel and mole. Choker scarves of marten, sable or mink are finding a fair sale, but are not as active as they were last year or in 1919, according to all reports.

JEWELRY.

The buying power of the public, which has not been in evidence in the jewelry trade for a few months, is gradually making itself felt in the retail line. This moderate revival of buying, although not felt to any considerable extent in the wholesale line, has acted as a stimulant to renew optimism. As was predicted, the buying done is centered on popular priced jewelry.

Mesh bag manufacturers asserted that little or no depression in their line has been felt. They experienced their banner year in 1920, when the demand for their article was in excess of the production, which was larger than in 1919. A portion of the leading manufacturer's factory has been forced to work two shifts to supply the demand from customers whose stocks have been badly depleted.

A statement was issued at the beginning of the year in which was announced no reduction in the price of mesh bags was to be made price of mesh bags was to be made this year.

Retrenchment in the clock trade is well under way. All factory employes have had their working week reduced. In some factories five days a week at eight hours a day has taken the place of the six days a week at nine hours a day, which was formerly in vogue.

Other factories have experienced a slightly larger cut in the working hours per week. Price productions have been made on some grades of clocks and alarm clocks, although no reduction in the high grade line of both has been made.

LEATHER.

A moderation in the demand for leather specialties for Easter trade has been perceptible. Practically all the buyers have had their wants satisfied, and some of the manufacturers are said to be sold up well into April.

There is a steadier call for sole leather than existed two months ago, and certain descriptions upper stock are moving with fair freedom. Ooze and Russia calf continue to enjoy an active market. The price which manufacturers demand for fabric for white shoes It is said, does not meet with the

They believe the price asked on this line to be higher than what they consider reasonable. Prices on the leading standards are nominal, although in other lines shading of prices is not uncommon.

Leather exported during January was valued at $3,784,683, compared to $4,107,793 during December and $3,496,671 in November, according to statistics compiled by the Tanners' Council of the United States.
